

Thomas Liddle Editor and Publisher, harvest magazine

At a glance

30 September 1991:

Saved and baptized.

Completed two-year Bible study program, and worked as a volunteer with Mission EurAsia, a group evangelizing the former Soviet Union. Re-designed their magazine, and visited Ukraine, Belarus and Russia, seeing many people saved.

Traditional media

1977 – 1991: Journalist on newspapers and magazines in New Zealand, followed by senior editorial roles in Australia.

Roles included sub-editor and arts writer on the Herald Sun, Melbourne, and Spectrum editor and Good Weekend deputy editor on The Sydney Morning Herald.

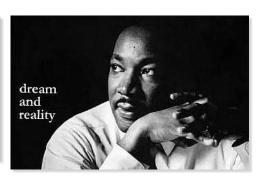

1991 –1994: Journalist with ACP magazines; specialist writer and columnist on emerging Internet technologies.

New media

1994 – 2000: Internet media pioneer.
Set up Australia's first daily online news service with the Microsoft Network (MSN) in Seattle from 1994-1997.
Also worked with MSNBC as executive producer of a multimedia package on racism, and covered President Clinton's visit to Australia in 1996. Helped to start, run and grow ninemsn, a joint venture between Microsoft and Australia's Nine Network, from 1997-2000.

Thomas Liddle harvesteditor@icloud.com

Corporate

Created a new editorial marketing strategy for a bank serving six million customers. This directly generated revenues of more than $20 million by packaging useful information into a series of compelling advice guides and magazines for business, home-buying and private bank segments.

And also. . . edited several books on finance, and worked as a consulting editor with News Corporation.

2006 – 2017:

Asia Pacific communications director with a Chicago-based global professional services firm, writing thought leadership white papers and driving public relations strategies across the region.

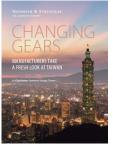

And also. . . created concepts for a new global website.

Current

Harvest ministry, and 'tentmaking'.

HARVEST MAGAZINE CV CH SEPTEMBER 18, 2017 © 2017